

An attacker can build a modified firmware that publishes the stored Wi-Fi credentials. The attacker can then flash the firmware using the Particle Cloud onto the Photon device. Firmware flashing takes only a short while and does not overwrite the current user application installed on the device. This allows the attacker to compromise the Photon device without disrupting its usual functions.

